Toll Roads In Michigan Seem To Be Doomed For Lack Of Bond Sale

A Long Battle seemed nearly over when the Michigan Turnpike Authority conceded at its August meeting that it has no buyers for revenue bonds and that there is little likelihood for state toll roads in the near future.

The Authority announced decisions to cut its staff to a skeleton crew, and adjourned without fixing a date for another session. These moves greatly reduce the group's ability to continue its fight for "pay as you drive" roads.

A climax came to the conflict between the Authority and its opponents, which include State Highway Commissioner Charles M. Ziegler. The decision also ended a policy fight that cut across party lines.

The argument between the two groups started with the organization of the Authority on a bipartisan basis in 1953. Ziegler and his supporters claimed that the State Highway Department could build the same roads as the Turnpike Authority with existing funds.

Charges of obstruction were leveled at Ziegler in return by the Authority. They contended that the major block in issuing revenue bonds was Ziegler's refusal to cancel plans for highways parallel to proposed toll roads.

No bonding firm was willing to risk the needed capital against revenue bond security when it feared that a free road might be constructed along the same general route as a toll highway, even though the roads were many miles apart.

Meanwhile, it could be many years before the Highway Department would have enough funds to complete such a task, they contended.

New state and federal highway programs boosted Ziegler's arguments recently.

"The biggest factor in the decline of the Turnpike Authority's power is the great increase in money available for regular highway construction," says Gerald Graves, executive director of the Michigan Good Roads Federation. Prior to 1951 the largest amount available for highways never exceeded $28 million in any year. In 1955, Michigan increased gasoline taxes to finance specific routes, giving priority to the interstate system. The Federal-Aid Highway Act of 1956 greatly increased federal aid to states for interstate trunkline construction.

"With these two programs Michigan will have more than $304 million available during the calendar years 1956-57 for highways. We anticipate that funds from federal sources alone will be $14 billion for the next 13 years," Graves states.

"Under these circumstances it is extremely unlikely that any bonding company will ever provide capital for revenue bonds," he stated.

Such a step would open the uncontrolled introduction of carp, suckers and other rough fish into inland lakes.

Meanwhile, the "minnow mystery" continues to plague most bait dealers as they scramble to supply the demands of their customers.

"What is the purpose of maintaining the Authority and its reduced staff?"

"We will be here on a stand-by basis until the highways on the Highway Department's program are either built or we see they cannot be built," Authority Chairman George N. Higgins says.

A New State Park is in the making at Laughing Whitefish Falls, located in Alger County in the Upper Peninsula.

O. S. Mansell, president of Celotex Corporation, which recently acquired 240,000 acres for lumbering purposes, says he will recommend to the company's directors that the falls and 100 surrounding acres be given to Michigan.

Governor Williams first broached the idea of ownership for the falls a few weeks ago. After meeting with Mansell, Williams praised the company's "generous attitude."

"It is evident that Michigan has acquired a good and useful citizen," Williams says.

Eventually the state hopes to acquire 800 acres for park and recreational purposes. Negotiations are underway for a possible swap of 700 additional acres around the falls for 700 acres of state owned land adjoining Celotex property.

Modern Isaac Walton's know the importance of their bait when going after the "big one."

It seems that minnows are becoming scarce in Michigan, and the Conservation officials aren't sure of the cause.

Dr. Ralph Hile, biologist of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service, says that the shortage could be due to one of several of three factors: a poor hatch of minnow eggs, unusual weather conditions, or a long-term downward trend in minnow population.

A gradual depletion of minnow population by fishermen could be the cause, says Dr. Gerald P. Cooper, director of the fisheries institute of the Department of Conservation.

All admit there are not many records on minnow habits to indicate a trend, and too little is known about the little fish.

A "minnow-reciprocity" bill, allowing an exchange of minnows between Michigan and Ohio was considered as a partial solution. However it was discarded when officials in the Department of Conservation expressed their disapproval.

Such a step would open the uncontrolled introduction of carp, suckers and other rough fish into inland lakes.

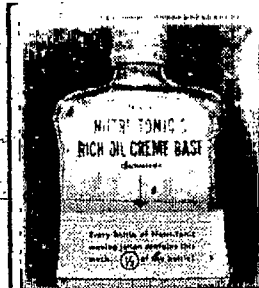

Meanwhile, the "minnow mystery" continues to plague most bait dealers as they scramble to supply the demands of their customers.

Profit Isn't Always What It Seems...

What does a corporation do with the profits it earns? The obvious answer is that it divides them up among the owners — the investors whose savings made the existence of the corporation possible.

But it isn't always so simple as that. As the American Economic Foundation points out, "There are many years in which corporations are forced by circumstances to overstate their profits and pay taxes on income that should not be taxed." This is the result of inflation, and the federal laws covering depreciation of the value of the tools used in production.

The foundation provides an actual example. It concerns a steel company, but all manner of others companies are in the same boat. In 1930, this steel producer had a plant costing about $10 million. Now that plant is being replaced — and at today's labor and material prices the cost will come to $64 million.

The company, through the depreciation allowance the law allows, has recovered the original $10 million. But the remaining $54 million must come out of its profits — the profits that are left after taxes have been paid.

In order to earn $54 million after taxes, this company has to earn $112,500,000 before taxes. Putting it another way, to pay for replacing that one plant, the company has to spend the profits resulting from $600 million of sales to its customers — about one-seventh of the sales.

Many believe that this is a highly inequitable situation that sorely needs correction by law. Without getting the pros and cons of that, however, it should be evident to us all that profits are not always what they seem — and that, additionally, good industrial profits are absolutely essential to this nation's growth and material welfare.

When We Go Shopping...

The cost of living has been in the news again. The government's official index recently climbed fractionally to an all-time high. One reason was a rise in food prices.

However, before you angrily decide that someone is extorting you when you go shopping, a few more facts should be taken into consideration. The National Association of Food Chains reports that food prices are still nearly three per cent below the 1952 peak, and that the average factory worker's take-home pay will buy him from 15 to 18 per cent more food now than it did in that prior year.

When prices rise, we tend to blame the retailer. That's a human failing — he's the man who sells us the goods and takes our money. But the fact is that a very small part of what we spend at retail does more than pass through his hands. Food chains, for instance, commonly earn a profit of about one cent on each sales dollar. Other kinds of stores earn three or four cents, and often less. The rest of the money goes for payrolls, supplies, rents, taxes, and so on.

There is still another factor that demands consideration in any price discussion. This is the tremendous change that has taken place in recent years in processing. We see it in its most dramatic form in foods which come to us in virtually a ready-for-the-table stage, and demand a minimum of time and work on the part of the housewife. Advanced processing of this nature requires much labor and costs money, and the consumer must pay for it.

We get top value when we go shopping — thanks in large part to our highly competitive mass distribution system.

Frederic Boy Scout News

Seventeen Boy Scouts of the Frederic Troop 78 with six counselors made the annual scout trip to Canada last week. It took a caravan of five cars loaded with boots, motors, food and Scouts to make the trip to a beautiful Canadian lake where the camp site was located.

The Scouts proved they were fishermen by catching 84 fish, most of which were cooked and eaten in camp. Several of the Scouts worked on cooking meals by cooking on the trip.

The most tragic thing seen was the miles and miles of burned over forest in Canada made by a big fire in 1946. To insure this doesn't happen in Michigan, troop 78 asks everyone to be extra careful with matches, cigarettes and campfires in the coming fall season.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Doyon have gone to Ft. Lauderdale, Fla., to visit Warren Smiley, Apt. 182E, International Airport. They plan to look for a permanent home in Florida while there.
